

Albany Door Consolidates Operations to Georgia

In October, Albany Door Systems announced the closure of its Port Washington, Wis., facility. By the beginning of 2011, all North American operations will be located at the company's Lawrenceville, Ga., facility.

Many Port Washington employees can relocate to Lawrenceville. For those who don't, Albany is offering severance, outplacement, and referral services.

This consolidation is expected to improve productivity and allow Albany to "leverage resources that will enhance quality, shorten lead times, and improve response times." ■

Bradbury Acquires Hilleng International and Diecraft

In September, the Bradbury Group, manufacturers of rollforming equipment, announced an agreement to acquire the assets and intellectual property of Hilleng International and Diecraft.

Hilleng is a manufacturer of sandwich panel laminating machinery and systems. The business has installed more than 250 panel manufacturing systems worldwide. Diecraft is a supplier of rollforming equipment to the rainwater goods market.

With this acquisition, the four brands of Bradbury, Hayes, Hilleng, and Diecraft will be under one umbrella. ■

Wayne-Dalton Introduces Wood Specialist Group

In November, Wayne-Dalton announced the creation of the Wood Specialist Group in Mt. Hope, Ohio, to oversee specialty wood door fulfillment.

"A custom wood garage door is like a fine piece of furniture—both take tremendous expertise and experience to design, craft, and assemble," says Dave Osso, brand manager. He says the group is a team of "experienced and talented employees to drive the process in a streamlined manner from start to finish."

The group will also help customers find the best solution among wood door options, such as the right wood species for the application. ■

Amarr Launches Garage Door Design Contest

In October, Amarr Garage Doors announced the Great Garage Door Design Competition, seeking ideas for the next generation of garage doors.

Amarr welcomed designs from architects, draftsmen, graphic artists, and anyone. Entries could be detailed sketches or simple drawings submitted in a pdf format via e-mail.

The contest ended Dec. 31, 2010. A panel of Amarr judges will announce the winner(s) on Feb. 28, 2011. The winner(s) will receive a $500 cash prize and will earn royalties based on sales if Amarr decides to manufacture and sell the winning design. ■
