

Sigmon named president of Entrematic division

On Nov. 14, Val Sigmon became the new president of Entrematic Sectional Doors Americas, following the retirement of longtime president Jeff Mick. Sigmon previously served as executive vice president.

Sigmon

Sigmon began his career at the company in 1995 as an assistant Door Center manager for Amarr (now part of Entrematic). He later became a Door Center manager, district manager, and director of national accounts. He has held several executive roles within the company and across multiple areas, including sales, customer service, product structure, applications engineering, supply chain, and human resources.

Juan Vargues, Assa Abloy Entrance Systems CEO, thanked Jeff Mick for his 19 years of service to Amarr and Entrematic. "He led the transformation of the company from a small regional player to one of the leading sectional door brands in America," said Vargues.

Sigmon earned a bachelor's degree in industrial relations and psychology from the University of North Carolina and an MBA from Wake Forest University. ■
